THE MYSTERIOUS FUNERAL GUEST

A Surprise for One Who Was Not Familian with the Danger of Open Doors. A young reporter who had come to New York from a western town, and was not accustomed to the ways of the metropolis, was assigned, as his first piece of work, to report the funeral of a wealthy but not exesedingly prominent man who lived up-town in a lavishly fornished house. He found the house jammed to the doors with people, and was unable, without making a nuisance of himself, to make his way any further into the crowd than the newel post of the great mahogany stairway.

His editor had warned him of the necessity of getting a large number of the names of those who were present, and of the The Ciarksville Land Improvement Comenormity of the crime of having even one of them incorrectly spelled. But here the raw reporter was, hemmed in immovably on all sides by people who looked horrified if he ventured to address them. He asked several of them for their names, but they either refused to give them or fulled to un derstand what he wanted them for.

"These people can't amount to much, nywny," he said to himself, "or they anyway," he said to himself, "or they would show a little more familiarity with soon spied a distinguished looking man; in operation passes entirely through the prop-faultiessly dressed, with a military carriage feet from the street car line.
